Cycle Chic

meeting

20-24 September 2012

Budapest

The Cycle Chic blogger network visit Budapest for a weekend around the Car Free Day 2012. Cyclechic.hu editors planned a four day activity for the bloggers who are excited about the bicycle boom of Budapest and the forthcoming developments in the bicycle-related urban planning. The programme offers sightseeing at night on bikes, workshops, design exhibitions, and a fashion show.

The Dutch guests are Philip de Roos and Joni Uhlenbeck, who moved from Amsterdam to Dublin in 2010. There they set up a Dutch bicycle store and were actively involved in the campaign to make Dublin more bicycle friendly. They are back now in Amsterdam and run the blog Amsterdam Cycle Chic.

Professional, political and communicational aspects of the development of bicycle friendly Dutch cities

A professional forum is organized on urban cycling by Hungarian Cyclists' Club and the Dutch Embassy. Four Dutch experts (Marjolein de Lange, independent consultant on bicycling and road safety - Dutch Cycling Embassy, Herbert Tiemens - Council of Governments Utrecht, Marc van Woudenberg - Amsterdamize, mobility consultancy services, Mark Wagenbuur - video maker and writer for his blog to make Dutch cycling more visible) are to participate and hold presentations, all focusing on the “mind shift” that took place in the Netherlands in the 1970s, when priority was given to cyclists and pedestrians in traffic planning and urban development projects. The moderator is Richárd Ongjerth, managing director at Hungarian Society for Urban Planning.

Dutch Bike, the unique exhibition of Eindhoven-based YKSI organization, having visited Moscow, Brussels, Bratislava, Tallinn and Tunis, is to arrive in Budapest to be installed at the new cultural hub in the city centre as a fine example of world-class Dutch design and cycling culture. The collection consists of excitingly modern bicycles, a brief overview of bicycle history and various design objects made from bike parts, all by young Dutch designers.

Joining the Design Week Budapest 2012 programme series, on 28 September, graphicist and bike collector Gábor Roskó is to deliver a performance in the exhibition space, accompanied by DJ Palotai`s music.
